upon the best c arse to pursue. It was proposed that both beats should advance and board thi ship, one upon each aide, at the same time, but Mr Smith, upon whom, by the melanchuly ca of master had devolved, thought that a proper regard for the interest of the owners, us well as for the safety of the men under his command, required him to avoid all personal risk, for which reason he proposed that both craws should take the other boat and proceed to the ship, leaving hun alone to await the issue This proposal met with no favor, the men declaring a wish rather to start for the nearest land-five or six Not there the soul now finds as native dwelling itays sail distant and the second mate telished it so little that he suffered his boat to drop astern the ship was short manned, had darted his lance several times at the naked savage on the rad, but for want of sufficient warp, it lell short three or four feet at each trial. He requested, there as the fellow kept his position without flinching and insolently defied him—but the mate though the jib boom, with a lance warp in his teeth ,-hut Manuel had become so exhausted by fright and fitigue, that he was unable to get up to the royalmast head to execute this part of the task His next plan, and the one he executed, was and when it was quite dark-taking every precaution to avoid exciting the suspicion of the mutineers, he would jump into the sea, and, passing ty the side of the ship, enter her by the cabin windows. The slip and beats were sur rounded by sharks, ittracted, probably, by the carcass of the whale killed in the morning, t detend himselt against which he took a boat knik in his keth, and let himself into the waler is a lently as possible.
